

4 German Skin-Care Brands to Know, Just in Time for Berlin Fashion Week

JANUARY 18, 2018 4:51 PM
by ZOE RUFFNER

5 / 5

Royal Fern

It was the discovery of Royal Fern's anti-aging properties that led German dermatologist Dr. Timm Golueke to create an entire skin-care line devoted to (and named after) the evergreen. The six-piece range, which can now be found at the likes of Bergdorf Goodman and Space NK, includes a balancing Cleansing Balm and a collagen-boosting Eye Cream. Next up? Stimulating hair growth treatments that will surely wind up in the beauty arsenals of coiffeurs the world 'round.

Photos: Courtesy of Royal Fern

Two days ago, Berlin Fashion Week kicked off—luring editors, stylists, and photographers from all corners of the earth to the Grey City to take in Germany's latest sartorial offerings. From the snowy street style ensembles to the eclectic runways, there been no shortage of spectacles, and yet, it may in fact be the hinterland of skin care that is the most noteworthy of all.

Take, for instance, a range of detoxing face masks that are as effective as they are Instagram-worthy, or a collection of supplements, serums, and more that harness the anti-aging benefits of olive oil. There's even a minimalist line, aptly named L that would certainly make the famously pared-back designer Jil Sander proud. And while many of the country's finest exports haven't yet touched down in the U.S., fret not: They're well worth the trip (or the cost of international shipping). Here, a look at four German beauty brands to know.